Research/Clinical Fellowship New York

Overview

The New York Research/Clinical Fellowship is a program for International Medical Graduates who wish to gain research and clinical experience in the United States for one year. This program will teach you how to generate and gather data in areas such as epidemiology, access to care, morbidity and mortality rates, and systems that will enable you to understand research while participating in clinical rotations. You will acquire the skills needed to write research papers and clinical case write ups for poster presentation or publication. Exposure to research and clinical rotations will improve your curriculum vitae and personal statements hence increasing your chances of getting accepted into a United States residency position.

The program makes no guarantee that candidates completing a research fellowship will be accepted to the residency program. Interviews and acceptance will depend upon the candidates complete application packet. Completion of the fellowship will give a candidate the opportunity to demonstrate their clinical knowledge and interpersonal skills; allowing them to at least attain strong letters of recommendations from the faculty, thus increasing the prospects of residency acceptance not only in New York but in programs throughout the US.
